The changes brought on by the internet revolution continue to redefine many aspects of our lives, both on the job and at home. The introduction of Web 2.0 technologies marks the beginning of a new phase in the evolution of the workplace that will have broad implications on how managers interact with their employees. Asher Adelman, a great workplace entrepreneur, will share some of these major trends and will discuss how blogs, social networking, and even Google will impact ethical dilemmas, define workplace relations, and alter the boss-employee relationship. Civility Lost? Sorry Works!
11:30 - 1:00 Southern Hills Marriott

Just say you're sorry... Lawsuits have been initiated simply because leaders fail to offer an apology – even when it is clearly the right thing to do. If the cornerstone of ethical behavior involves respecting others, then it could be that our society in general is slipping a bit. Our speaker, disclosure training consultant Doug Wojcieszak, will demonstrate how that lack of civility has severely cost business, and he will offer some practical solutions for restoring best behavior in our workplace and culture.

Mr. Wojcieszak's unique experiences prompted him to research and develop Sorry Works! – a coalition dedicated to promoting apologies for full-disclosure methods as middle ground solution to rising medical malpractice suits. As founder of Sorry Works!, Mr. Wojcieszak has watched the organization grow to over 3800 members nationwide and the website has received over 4 million hits. In partnership with Stevens & Lee legal and risk management firm, Sorry Works! Has become the nation's leading disclosure training organization. The group has been featured in Time Magazine, National Review, National Law Journal and the American Medical Association News.
